NAMES OF THE SCHOOLS.

NAMES OF WASHINGTONIANS HAND-ED DOWN TO POSTERITY.

The Newspaper Profession Not Forget ten in Naming the Places Where Young Washington is Taught-An

The schools of Washington diffe from those of other cities in more than one way. A peculiarity that strikes the stranger is the fact that all of them are stranger is the fact that all of them are designated by proper names and are not numbered numerically or alphabetically as is the case in many places. It is a good thing that this should be so. It is well that our prominent citizens, those who have left examples worthy to be followed, should be remembered by fitting memorials, and it also relieves the list from the meantains. fitting memorials, and it also relieves the list from the monotony so prevalent in other places. The Commissioners have the naming of the schools, and thus far they have shown a praise worthy taste in the selection of names. Every one is familiar with the names of the various schools, but few know anything of the people after whom they are named. A few of them take their names from the localities in which they are situated, and these have not been noticed. A complete list, with these exceptions, have been procured and exceptions, have been procured and will be found valuable and interesting. Rapine School on R street, between Seventeenth street and New Hampshir Seventeenth street and New Hampshire avenue, is not yet completed. It takes its name from Daniel Rapine, who was Mayor of the city in 1812 and 1813.

Berret School, which is also in process of building, is on Fourteenth and Q streets, and is named from James G. Berret, who was mayor of the city at the beginning of the late unpleasantness. His sympathies were with the Confederate cause and he was arrested and sent to Fort Lafayette, where he was for a long time confined.

Arthur School is on Arthur Place, near the District building, and takes its name from the late President.

Lenox School is on Fifth street, be-

Lenox School is on Fifth street, be tween G street and Virginia avenue and is so called after Walter Lenox and is so called after Water Lenox, mayor of Washington in 1850.
Smallwood School is named in honor of Mayor Samuel Smallwood, who served three terms and at last died in office.

Corcoran School is on Twenty-eighth street, between M and Olive. It is not known whether it was called after Rhown whether it was called after Thomas Corcoran, who was half a dozen times mayor of Washington, or his brother, the great philanthropist.

Blair School takes its name from Frank Blair, who was in partnership with Reeves in publishing the old Congressional Globe, and the father of the distinguished Montgomery Blair, who afterward became Attorney-General in Andrew Jackson's Cabinet.

Maury School is named after James Maury School is named after James W. Maury, brother of the great geogra-pher. He was mayor of Washington in 1852-4.

Towers School is so called from John T. Towers, who served a term as mayo in 1854-6. In 1854-6.

Carberry School is also called after a mayor of Washington. Thomas Carberry held that position in 1822 and 1824.

Cranch School takes its name from long deceased Justice of the United States Supreme Court who took a deep interest in public school education.

Jefferson School was named in honor of the great leader of the Democratic party and the fourth president of the United States.

Amidon School is so called after Mrs. Amidon, who was one of the pioneer superintendents in the public schools of the District.

Bradley School takes its name after Mayor Bradley, who served in that capacity in 1834. Greenleaf School is in the County and is situated in a point of land once owned by a gentleman of that name. Addison School is in Georgetown and is called after Henry Addison, who was mayor of the town before it became a part of Washington. mayor between 1824 and 1826, when he resigned.

Gales School is called after his suc cessor, Joseph Gales, Jr., one of the editors of the old National Intelligencer Seaton School was named for his associate, W. W. Seaton, who also became mayor of the city, serving for ten years. He was re-elected five times and was mayor for a longer period than anyone in the history of the town.

Twining School was called after the first appointee under the present form of government, Major William Twining.

Phelps School is named after his as sociate in office.

Peabody School was called after the great English philanthropist and educator, George Peabody, who did so much for public schools all over the world. Cook School takes its name from John F. Cook, the present superintendent of negro schools in the District, and form-negro schools in the District, and form-erly collector of taxes.

Threlkeld School is called after a very wealthy citizen of the District who once owned a great deal of property in the vicinity of the building. In past years the section was known as Threl-keld's addition to Georgetown.

Webster School takes its name from the great New England orator and statesman.

statesman. Thomson School is called after old Schoolmaster Thomson, who taught the young idea how to shoot for nearly half a century.

Morse School takes its name from Samuel F. B. Morse, the inventor of the telegraph, and a long resident of this Blake School is called after Dr. Blake a very prominent citizen of the District in ante-bellum days. He was Commis-sioner of Public Buildings and Grounds and was for many years president of the Metropolitan Bank. Curtis School takes its name from a prominent citizen of Georgetown who was a school trustee for many years. Stevens School is a colored branch on Twenty-first street, between K and L northwest, and is called after Thad-Stevens, the great Pennsylvanian.

Garnett School is named after a preminent colored man who took an interest in the future of his race and did not much toward advancing them toward higher education.

Banneker School takes its name from Benjamin Banneker, a negro mathema tician and astronomer, who lived in Washington in the latter part of the hist century. He published an almanac an-nually and assisted in running the boundary lines of the District boundary lines of the District.

Brent School was named after Mayor Frent, a prominent citizen of ante-bellum days.

McCormick School is called after a

McCormick School is called after a teacher who is still lovingly remembered by many of the middle-aged people of Washington.

Briggs School was named Van Ness by the old Commissioners, but at the solicitation of a delegation of colored people headed by Frederick Douglass the present board changed the name to what it now is in honor of Martha B. Briggs, a colored woman, who spent a quarter of a century of her life in educating colored youth.

cating colored youth Force School takes its name from Peter Force, who screed as Mayor of the city for two terms, from 1836 until 1840. He was one of the strongest men intellectually of his time, and a powerful political pampheteer.

Henry School is so called in honor of Professor Henry, the famous head of the Smithsonian Institute.

Jones School, at the corner of First and L streets northwest, is named in honor of Alfred Jones, a prominent negro business man of the city, who died several years ago.

3 Hours to Philadelphia. The B. & O. trains for Philadelphia and New York are leaving Washington promptly on schedule time. The B. & O. is the only line running three-bour trains to Philadelphia, and the average time of its New York train is less than via any other line.

A Pittsburg Mystery.

The Pittsburg police have another musder mystery to wrestle with. Several weeks ago Dr. C. H. Miller of Hutchinson. Kansas, was found sitting in a pool of blood in an empty coke car on the Allegheny Valley Kallenad, in this city. He was taken to the West Penn Hospital and unusal care exercised, as several of the physicians at that institution had graduated from the same college. Dr. Miller died, however, last Friday and his body is now at the morgue. A brother residing at 75 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, is expected to arrive in Pittsburg to-night and the inquest will be resumed to-morrow. Dr. Miller was last seen alive by the matron of the Forty-third Street Station of the Allegheny Valley Rallroad. He and an unknown man had been loltering about the station and when told to leave said they were waiting for a train to take them to Philadelphia. The woman informed them that they were on the wrong road and indicated the direction they should take to reach the Pennsylvania Railroad depot. Miller was not seen again until found in the box and the whereabouts of his companion are unknown. Dr. Miller's skull was fractured at the back and lower portion of the head. There were also two scars above the right eye.
